

Flowers are Linked to Emotional Well-Being

Flowers trigger happy emotions, heighten feelings of satisfaction and affect future behavior in a positive manner, according to a study co-sponsored by Rutgers University in New Jersey. Researchers concluded that flowers help people feel less depressed, anxious and agitated, and the presence of flowers leads to increased contact between family members.

The gift of flowers — there's just nothing like it. Give some to your friends, or indulge yourself.

It's good for your health!

"Thank you so very much.
Your flowers are outstanding."

Fresh cut flowers from Stork Road Farm...all summer long!

We grow lots of fresh flowers for cutting here in North Creek, all summer long. Picture an overflowing summer bouquet of bright shasta daisies, deep blue monkshood, stately gladiolus and the happy faces of red and gold sunflowers, the punk hairdo of basket flowers, bunches of fresh zinnias and the wonderful fragrance of lilies and Ethiopian glads. So many flowers to share!

If you have a garden, you know just how hard it can be, sometimes, to cut flowers from it...you don't want to spoil the display, right? So let us cut from ours for you. Subscribe today for an overflowing bunch of freshly cut flowers delivered weekly from the end of June into September to your home, inn or business ~ at 2008 prices!

Yours in the joy of flowers,

~ Karen
